

F1.2 - ROLE OF INDIVIDUALS IN SHAPING HISTORY

What role do individuals play in shaping history? Explain with examples.

Individuals play a big role in shaping history. If it weren't for these individuals, we might not be where we are today.

George Washington was one individual who played a big role in shaping history. He was our first president, the first person to actually "control" our nation. He did good things for our nation, like making peace treaties with other countries. After George Washington retired from being president, other individuals were inspired to lead the nation, which also helped shape our nation. He also won the Revolutionary War for us, and if he hadn't, Great Britain might have control of this nation.

Another individual who helped shape our nation was Abraham Lincoln. He wanted to eliminate slavery, and when he became president, he did something about it. He put so much work into achieving that goal, and eventually slavery was completely wiped out. If it hadn't been for Abraham Lincoln, we'd probably still have slaves in the U.S.A..

George Washington and Abraham Lincoln were two individuals that helped shape our nation to be a free country to everybody. If it weren't for them, the U.S. would probably be controlled by a different nation, and we might not have as much freedom as we do now. We might also still have slaves if it weren't for these individuals, and the freedom of slaves played a crucial role in shaping history. This is the role individuals play in shaping history.
